SPEAKERS

Lachlan Standfield has worked in health economics consultancy for over fifteen years, playing a significant role in over 100 reimbursement submissions globally. He has managed an MSAC evaluation group for DoHA in Australia, assessed medical technologies for the NZ MoH, and lectured on health economics at The University of Melbourne. Lachlan has conducted economic assessments of a wide array of pharmaceutical, device and diagnostic technologies using Decision Tree models, Markov cohort models, microsimulations and discrete event simulation techniques. Lachlan is currently completing his doctoral studies with Griffith University, focusing on the economic modelling of capacity constraints in dementia care.

Dr. Sheree Gibb is a Research Fellow with the Virtual Health Information Network (VHIN) and the Dept of Public Health at the Uni of Otago in Wellington. She has worked with the Christchurch Health and Development Study, the Canterbury Suicide Project, and Statistics New Zealand.
